Ray Bradbury

Ray Bradbury, one of America's foremost authors, sold his first short story at 22; he wrote every day of his adult life, leading to the publication of hundreds of short stories and nearly 50 books, including the frightening model of a dystopian future, Fahrenheit 451. Also well known as a poet, screenwriter, and the host of his own TV show, Bradbury is primarily recognized for his amazing contributions to science fiction and fantasy literature, which include The Martian Chronicles, a series of connected short stories set on Mars, and The Illustrated Man, about someone whose tattoos come alive to tell their own stories.
